"Why did he do H?" was the query which the startled public asked, sier the first shock which he information of Judgo Johnston's death erceited, had iseen in a measure dissipated. There was only one snawer, and that was that the death of Judge Johnston's wife, which occurred betober 72, under necu tarly distressing eircumstances, had so preyed noon his mind that it resulted in scute melancholia, a severe attack of which culminated in anleide.

A tew minates before seven o'clock that morning Mary Fix, anold and faithful servant of the family, heard the Judge loave his chamber on this second floor and go to the bathroom, as was his custom. He returned very shortly and took a glass of water from a pitcher stunding in the hall-way. Then he retired to his own apartment. A moment I ter Miss Fox heard the multied short of a revelver. Naw ORLEANS, Dec. 26.-The story of naay acts of herolam on the part of the crew of the stsamer John H. Haans, which was burned near Plaquemine yesterday, are being told to-day by the survivors who were brought here. One story makes James Givens the hero of the occasion. Givees was one of the crew. Whea tha eteamer touched the hank and bounded away, ead Pilot Jolies left the wheel and sprang overhoard, Glvens quickly realized that the salvation of all on board depeaded upon the Hanna being brought hack to the hank. At this time the pilot-house was surrounded by the flames. Nothing dauated, the hrave fol-low sprang to the whest, brought the steamer's head again to the hank, and in order to keep her there locked the wheel in the proper position. While he was doing this the fire swept over the pilot-house and he was imprisoned in the finmes, which had airsady severely burned him. It wes high time to think of his own life now that he had rendered possible the naving of scoree of others. To escape was accessary to push through the walli of fire surrounding him. Givens made a dash for the side of the steamer and, although frightfully burned, sacceeded in reaching it. Although a mov-ing mass of fire be did not lose his presence of inind, but jumped late the river and struggled to the hank, where he was pulled oat, cruelly i urned and exhausted from his efforts. Givens now ilss at the hespital in this city with his eyes hurned out, and with several other severe injuries believed to be fatal. No man sver per formed a more herolo act than that of Givens, and it is a matter of universal re gret that his gallantry and humanity should have cost him so dear. The total loss of life by the burnlag of the Hanna l now placed at twenty-four.

ANOTHER DISASTER.

The Steamer John H. Hanna Destroyed by Fire.

Many of the Craw and Passengers Perish-The Flanges Originate Among Colton Bales.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 25,-Another river dleaster. The Quechita steamer, the John H. Haana, was burned near Plaquemine, a hundred miles from here, about midnight iast night, and twenty lives lost, including the chisf officer of the boat. The Hanna wea booked to land et Plaquemlae, and was but a short distance above that town when a colored roustabout, standing nea the boliers, cried ont that the boat was on fire. The next moment the flames burst from a big tier of cotton bales, and a general short of "fire" went up. John Cullan, one of the stokers, ran to tho sngine-room and gave the alarm. Quick se he was, and, although the promptest steps were takee to get the boat into chore, it was not quick enough. She was laden with cotton in a very dry condition. The flames sprang from hale to bale like a flash of lightning, and shot up through the cabin and over the sides of the cot-ton, wrapping the entire boat in firs. The alerm had been sounded at the first sight of the firs, the steam whistle blowing and the bells riaging and arousing every one ahoard. The chief clerk, S. R. Powe i went to every door, made cortain that the passengers and hands were aroused, and urged them to hurry at once to the front of the boat, before they were cut off. They did so, but there was the usual coafusion in consequence of the darkness of the night, the immense quantity of blinding smoke that poured up from the cotton and the panic which pre valled. The John H. Hanna was built la Medisoa, Ind., in 1876, and hailed from Louisville, Ky. She was of 377 tonnage, and was owned by the Ouachlta River Consolidated Line. She was valued at $18,000, and wes insured for $12,000 in local and foreign companies.

gave Harry a chance to mnko inquiries about the Frobishams; but, though many were acquainted with them, none could give him the slightest clew to their whoreabouts, so nothing remnined to him but to trust to the chapter of accidents which had already afforded him two strange op-portunities of meeting members of the famportunities of meeting memoers of the talling in which he was so deeply interested.

nd going through the same dull rounds of duty. Some found refuge in eards and drinking, gambling their pay away; others turned to study, but the few books they constant lending; and all looked cagerly forward to the stirring times that the spring would bring them, even though death himself was their herald. Harry's father's letters, too, worried him, for the old man was beset with a strong presentiment of evil, to be brought about by Alphonse Lecroix, agulust whom he was perpetually warning him. Then his constant allusions to "that girl" were not of a nature to be agreeable to each who level here. to be agreeable to one who leved her so passionately that he would not believe it possible for her pure nature to do my wrong. I like these impetuous young fellows who put their lady-leves on padestals and make goddessos of them. Their gonerous natures are rarely decelved, for I actice that such implicit devotion is usually rewarded by the crowning blessing of a good voman's lovo.

Pondering over such little troubles, Harry sat one day in the squalid chamber of a cottage he had deemed himself fortunate to cure as quarters, when the door opened and Gordon Grey entered. There was a sheepish, hsag-dog look about the lud's face which esught Harry's eyo ut once—so different from the hright ahanden which usually illuminated the young fellow's handsomo foatures.

"See here, Winthrop," he blurted out, without preface, as he flung himself on Harry's bed, "I'm in a hole."

"Oh, you needn't grin. I'm regularly treed. There's nothing left for me, as fur as I can see, but to just go and blow my brains out, unless—" hardly repress a smile.

"Well, unless!" "You can ict me have two hundred 'dolinrs and ask no questions what I want it Harry looked at his young lieutenant curiously, but not unkindly.

"Two hundred deliurs is a large sum," he said, gravely, "and I must know what you want it for, or I shall not feel like lending it to you. Besides, I haven't such an amount by me, and should be driven to borrow it

"Oh, no, you wnuldn't," Gordon interrupted, esgerly, "Chatterton said ho'd take your note of hand, if —"
"So you have fallon into the cluiches of "You did! When you told me that you had been seduced into that gambling den of a canteen, I told you what the end would be. If you had listened to me-"

"Oh, yes, I know. But, Harry, I was dipped so deeply that I was obliged to make un effort to win back my losings, and—"

POOR BARCLAY. The violets had began to lift their heads in the Virginian dells, the trees to blossom, the birds to herald the approach of spring, when once more the hills reverberated with the storm of battle.

Burnslde had been transferred to Tennessee and General Hooker was in command of the Army of the Potomac. Leaving Sedg-Harry's bed, "I'm in a hole."

There was such a climax of comical distress in the expression, that Hurry could army, a hundred thousand strong, across the Rappahannock to meet Lee at Chancel-lersville, where the scouts had brought word he was lying with sixty thousand men.

All alght iong Harry Winthrop had been ia the saddle on a reconneitering supedition, and at dawn had flung himself to rost beside the camp-fire. The heavy tramp of Infant-ry, the clash of moving squadrous, the dult roll of artillery made sleep lupossible; but it was something to be grateful for to stretch the wesry limbs and rest.

Then as the hours rolled by there came from the woods the sharp detonating re-ports of musketry and the booming thunder of artillory, and Winthrop knew that the battle was begun.

Suddonly there was the sharp crack of a rifio in the opposite direction, and in a minute or two one of Harry's own men dashed in mad haste among them with the cry: "The robs in force in the woods yender are closing upon us!" The command was in the saddle almost before the words had left the mun's lips. In reckless haste they rods to main's lips. In reckless hasto they rous to carry the unwelcome tidings, but the warn-ing came too late; for hardly had they reached their lines than the enemy was upon them twenty thousand strong, and though the men fought like heroes, the Union right was reuted.

It was another of Lee's master moves on the chess-board of battle. Relying on the dense woods to conceal his movements, ho had risked the perilous chance of send-ing Jackson with one-third of his army to attack the enemy on the rear. That night Hooker took a now position.

Tho noxt day tho hattle raged with renewed

As General Hooker stood leaning against a pillar of Chuncellorsville House a cannon-hall crashed against it and burled him senseless to the ground; and for more than an hour the Northern troops fought without a leader. But Winthrop saw none of this. He was riding in het haste on the road to Frederloksburg, seeking for aid from Sedgwick. Nor had he far to go, for that galiant General had taken Fredericksburg, and was now flinging himsolf on Lee's rear, ut the moment that the Southern forces were forming for a graad attack. The tide of battle turned on the new-comers, whe were driven across the river, and the army of th Potemae withdrew to its old camping-

It was during the heavy march in the night that Harry Wiathrop, in command of the rear-gunrd, worn with the two-days' sighting and loss of sleep, listlessly followed his troop along the dusty highway. By Barclay, who was even in a more exhausted condition, for not only was he half dead with intigue, but he suffered from a subercut on the arm and the faintness consequent on much loss of blood.

"Cheer up, old foliow," Harry said, affectionately. "We shall soon be under canvas ngain, and a long rest will put you all right.''

'' I don't know about that,'' was the cheer "I don't know about that," was the cheer-less reply. "Of course I don't think that this little scratch I've got is going to be my death-blow, but I've clenn lost heart and my mind wanders off to the wife and bairns at home. A mnn with a family carries a houvy mortgage on him when he goes accelding!" a-soldiering.

"You are worm out and discouraged— that is all," Hurry claimed, while his comonnion relupsed into moody silonce.

They were approaching a part of the road which lay at the edge of a deep ravino, whose side was overgrewn with rank weeds and scrubby bushes. Every now and then they find passed some straggling, foot-sore infantry man, who had fallon out of ranks, and was dragging his weary limbs ulong as best he could. It was just such a figure as this that they overtook as they reached this dnagerens spot in the rugged road. It was not utterly dnrk, for the stars were out, but it was not light enough to distinguish the uniform the man wore; in fact, Winthrep never gave him a second thought beyond turning his horse's head a little to the left so that he should not ore; in fact, ecoud thought beyond turnical a little to the left so that he snow.

As they got ahreast of him the man turned upon him, grasped the bridle of his horse, and the flash of the pistol blazed straight at Harry Winthrep's face. Instinctively he stooped to grapple with the sassisin, and the action saved his life, for the bullet plowed through the housings of his saddio and burled itself in the breast of his comrade, who fell with a groan to the carth. Poor Barclayl his premonitions were soon remized.

In an instant the murderer flung himself in the breast of his comrade, who fell with a groan to the care in the dawn of the morning success seemed to crewn his efforts.

"Some of your fellows," said a grizzied sergeunt, "lio ever yonder, and there is junt such a youngster as you describe among them."

"I must see for myself," Harry said, wh determination. "Ksy, Sergeant, I will give you and your men fifty dollars to nucover the grave of the boy you speak of."

Ere he left the fattil spot Winthrep's eye chanced to rest on a little glittaring object lying on the grass. He picked it up, and found it was a porties of a gold watch chain—two long autique links, curionsly wrought, and doubtless of foreign workmanship.

"This mute witness against the man whe did the foul deed," he muttered, "shall never leave me till I have avenged poor Barclay's death."

Barelay's death."

How well he kept his pledge the sequel abows.

Meanwhile, In the Confederate lines the peans of victory were hushed for the walls of sorrow, for Stonewall Jackson, the Idol and hope of his people, iay stark in death, shot down by his own troops, who mistook his escort for Federal cavalry. Better had the Sawh jost supple arms than the man the South lost a whole army than the man whose magical same was such a tower of strength to their canse.

Of course, Winthrop knew nothing of this. He had, however, troubles enough of his own to harrass him. Ever before his cyes were the figures of Barclay's wife and children crying to him for vengeance. That the poor fellow had dled in his place he nsver doubted, and the consciousness of that added to his agony.

He did all he could to mitigate the distress of Barclay's loved ones, sending them every relie he could find of the man they Still the days crept by and no gleam of light came to penetrate the mystery.

Once, it is true, he thought he was on the evo of a discovery. Ho had been talking with a number of officers, and had just bade them adion and was hastening to his quurters, when one of thom, a Major Mo-Donald, hurried after him and said: "One moment, Captain Wiathrop, if you

"None in the least," Harry snid, as he drew it from his pocket.

The Major scanned it arrowiy and his "Do you recognize it!" Wintbrop asked,

"Oh, don't let that arouse the detective in you," the Major replied with a laugh, for though Willie is not one of your psalm singing youngsters and may be a little too industrious in sowing his wild onts, he is quite beyond the suspicion of hornicide, let alone cold-blooded murder." "Still he may—"

of Gettysburg, and the speaker was Gordon Grey. Meade had succeeded Hooker. And the sight was indeed theilling. By Lee's command two hundred guis belched forth their volleys on Cemotery Ridge, and for two mortal hours the n'r was thick with shricking shells. Then the deafening conshricking shells. Then the deafening caunonade lulled, and the Confederates peured from the woods in double line of battle over n mile long, with shrmishers hevering on their frent. Even the Union ranks could scarce forbear a cheer of admiration, as silently, and with splendid steadiness, that magnificent column of eighteen thousand men moved up the slope. A hundred guns tore great gaps in their ranks, and still they advanced with Spartan fortitude. Infantry volleys smote their front, yet they pushed forward—nay, they oven bayoneted the canforward—nay, they oven bayoneted the can-noncers at their guns and planted their flugs on the breastwork. Then upon this strug-gling mass the Federais converged on every side. No human endurance could stand the atorm, and Leo's ranks fell broken and Burgundy, Chumpagne and Provence, where they are specially reared for the purpose, the untural delicate flavor of their fiesh being improved by feeding them on beds of arematle herbs. It is net merely, however, as adelicacy that saalis are so generally appreciated in Frauce. They also take very high rank as n nutritious food, and from the time of the ancient Romans downward have been regarded as excellent in consumption and "weakness" of the chest. According to Payne they centain seventy per cent. 2f water, sixteen per cent. of nitrogou, one per cent. of fat, two per cent. of salts and five per cont. of undetermined matter.

Dr. Ebrard, a French authority, who has made the snail his special study, declares that the weight of mont represented by the snalls sold amounts to that found on cutting up a whele flock of caives and young helfers. He estlmates the monthly consumption of snails in Paris at hulf a million. The market price of the great viacyard snalis ls from two francs fifty centimes to three francs fifty centimes per 100, while these from the hedges, woods and forests bring only two francs to two francs fifty centimes. The proprietor of one snailicry in the vicinity of Dijon is said to net over 7,000 francs annuaily.

The snail is reared and fattoned with great care in some cantons of Switzerluad as an article of juxury nad is exported in a pickled state. It is also enten as a relish and 'nutritious article of food in Austria, Spain, Italy and in seme sections of the United States. The Ashnatees and other African tribes smoke them and out them as daily food nli the year round.

In Algeria in the markets lurge heaps of snails are sold by the bushel and the hundred as an article of food. Vonders hawk them in the streets of Calro. In modern Rome frush-gathered snails are hawked by women from door to door, and the housewives serve them cither belied in their shells, or stewed or fried in oii. It is a common sight to sue ia an Italian city the people gathered around number of baskets lilled with snails, waiting for thom to be thrown into a iargo iron pot suspended over a fire made between four stones. Herbs and love apples (tomatoes) are added, and when done thu broth is retalled to the expectant bystanders. As the cook ladles out the savory concoction, she or he gives utterance to trade eries. BONANZA FARMING.

The big Grandin wheat furm in Dakota comprises about 40,000 acres, of which 13,000 are under cultivation. 11.000 acres boing sown to whent. There are used on the furm 45 gang piews, two plows in gung, each cutting 14 to 15 inches. There ure 45 gang iarrows. These are 6 feet square, but are arranged together side by side to work 24 feet wide. One long eveuer draws the four with a pair of mules $1.50; and a rattle for the buby, that near each end. One man drives both was 40 cents; and such a cute, cumning ams. The advantage of this system | little hood for the little chorub, only $7; s worthy of notice by other furmers. It reduces the number of mun usually required by one-half. There are fortyfour broadcast sowers, sowing eight feet each, but two of these are uttached end to end with a span of mules before oach, and ene man drives both spans, another saving of half the man force. There are slxty-five self-binding huresters employed on the place. Modern improvements have so perfected these that only one expert is required for the whole, ospecially since the experionced workmen on the machine are kept from year to year, and they are able to attend to any little repairs. The harvesters are drawn by three mulos and one and one-half to two men are required to shock the bundles from each machine. The thrashors, of which there are six, are quito extensive uffairs compared with these of former times of with these of the fiails or the animals on the thrashing floor of our boyhood. Each one of those machines, driven by steam power, thrashes out from 1,900 to 2,000 bushels a day. They are sot down in the center of a hundred acres of shocks and when these are thrushed are moved to the center of another hundred acres. The working force on a single thrasher forms quite a little nrmy. Thus, there is, first, the general superlatendent, eight bundle toams to naul the shocks, with eight drivers and eight other men, part in the field and part at the machine as pitchers and unloaders. At the machine two men are required simply to cut the band. There are three feeders, two nt work and an alternato. Thea there are the engineer, the firemen, the waterman, the "straw-bucker," who with two mules and n pole removes the straw accumulating before the machlue, a barn man to care for the animals, and the cook and his assistant. The wheat is received into wooden tanks holding 100 bushels oach, and four mon with four wagons drawn by four mules each, one tank wngon at the machine and three on the road, take the wheat to the cievators. This saves bag and bugging. It will thus bo seen that there is a force of thirty men employed to run a single machine. -St. Paul Globe.

That part of the report of 6|gner Zanardslil, the Minister of Jussice, which deals with this subject, contalas some interesting statistics as to he enforcement of the death penalty a the various States of Europe. Capihi punishment was abolished in Tus-sany in 1859, in Rumania in 1864, in Portugal in 1867, (there had been no execution since 1843), in Helland la 1870 (the last execution was in 1860); and it has been abolished in seventeen out of the twenty-one cantons of Switserland, though in one of the seventeen it has been re-established. In Italy there has been no execution since 1877. With regard to these countries which still retain the death penulty upon their statute books, in Belgium there has been no execution since 1863, in Prussia, out of 558 death-sentences proneunced between the years 1870 and 1880, only in one case—that of Hodel -was the sentence carried out; in Baden of 28 and in Wurtemburg of 30 such sentences only one lu cucli case was carried out: In Bavaria out of 134 priseners condemned seven only were executed, and in Suxony in the same period of eleven years there was ao execution. In Sweden only four death-senteaces out of 21 were carried out. in France between the years 1830 and 1880 the death seatences executed fell from 65 to 26 per cent., and from 1880 to 1884 to 15 per cent. In Austria the percentage fell from 16 ln 1869 to 3 ln 1884. In England only have death sentences been carried into effect in any degree approaching to certainty. -St. James' Gazette.
